Oktoberfest adds German flavor to SU

By Jonathan Moynihan
Staff Writer

Salisbury University received a shot of German culture this past Wednesday as the thirty-seventh annual Oktoberfest welcomed the fall season and gave students the German Department, Thompson said, "We here at SU want to celebrate the spirit of the fall, and we're fortunate to have the beer even though we aren't making any money off of it."

One of the most appealing parts of Oktoberfest for students is the chance to enjoy all it has to offer, including beer.

"Oktoberfest started as a wedding ceremony for a prince and his princess in Bavaria, Germany, but it turned into a festival of beer, and it's been going on ever since," said German Club advisor Klaudia Thompson. Also head of the famous beer garden positioned in front of Henson. The majority of those attending Oktoberfest were present within the beer garden boundaries and almost all could be seen enjoying an ice cold beverage, but only after being checked for I.D. and paying $2.75 (per beer).

Ben Sota, founder and executive director of Pittsburgh's Zany Umbrella Circus, spoke on Commedia dell'Arte this past Friday, October 10, in the Great Hall of Holloway Hall as part of SU's fall Renaissance cultural events series. Sota, an artist-in-residence at Salisbury, has been teaching theater students about classical Italian comedy, specifically Commedia dell'Arte. Commedia dell'Arte is an unwritten or improvised drama, a sort of slapstick humor. The six classic characters can be compared to Charlie Chaplin and The Three Stooges. This type of entertainment was developed in Italy and was popular during the fourteenth through the eighteenth centuries.

Sota, while entertaining with a few other talents, introduced the audience to the six classical characters of Commedia dell'Arte, acting as each of the characters, each with its own story, personality and mask. He also demonstrated some skills that the actors used while playing some of these characters. Actors portraying these characters often juggle, stilt-walk and perform balancing tricks.

Sota knows more than just Classical Italian Comedy—he knows the world of circus.

A spook-tacular time at the Salisbury zoo

Thousands of children and parents streamed through the zoo Friday and Saturday night to celebrate Night of the Living Zoo, a Halloween related event that is the Salisbury Zoo's biggest fundraiser. Children learned about snakes, cockroaches, and other creepy crawlly creatures. Zoo volunteers were on hand to dole out information and candy. Night of the Living Zoo benefits the conservation and education programs at the Zoo.

Mikulski, Kratovil visit SU for education forum

Senator Barbara Mikulski discussed the importance of the "freedom to achieve," while addressing the issue of federal educational funding.

By Vanessa Junkin
Staff Writer

Senator Barbara Mikulski and Frank Kratovil, candidate for U.S. Congress, both spoke at a forum held in Holloway Hall last Monday.

Dr. Janet Dudley-Eshbach said that while as the university president, she does not endorse candidates from any political party, SU is "honored when the senator comes to campus."

HyoBin Sung, SU Dem's president, started off the event by introducing the first speaker, Senator Mikulski, to the audience — a group of not only SU students, but also members from the community.

Mikulski voiced her opinion that the public should vote for Barack Obama and Joe Biden in the upcoming presidential election, noting that November's election does not only decide the next four years; it decides the outcome of many years into the future, as well.

Mikulski went on to say that Kratovil would be the best choice for to deal with issues such as the economy and jobs, the environment, universal healthcare and working to end the war in Iraq.

Mikulski also discussed the importance of the "freedom to achieve," which involves the great potential of American citizens.

The Pell Grants for college tuition have been increased, she said, adding that she advocates for the option to monetarily reward students for going into a career that benefits the public and also is a proponent of work-study.

Despite the success of the existing programs, Mikulski said, "We want to do more."

U.S. First District Congressional candidate Kratovil first introduced a few people in the audience, and then spoke about himself and his background.

Kratovil is a State's Attorney from Queen Anne's County and has been working as a prosecutor since 1995.

He discussed how he is running for office because "nothing really seems to change." He went on to explain that he'd like to be a part of change in the nation to help the citizens of both the present and the Warning: one in four college women have experienced rape or sexual assault, but statistics can change; men can help! One in Four Inc. is a non-profit organization advocating rape prevention. Their National Peer Education Team, on an RV-tour across college campuses throughout America, parked in Red Square on Thursday to deliver this message directly to Salisbury University's male students.

Fraternities, athletes, on-campus residents and clubs filled the all-male audience in GUC's Wicomico Room, to hear the Men's Program, "How to Help a Sexual Assault Survivor: What Men Can Do." The event was hosted by Student Counseling Services, Student Health Services, Residence Life and the Panhellenic Association.

Carter Shortwell, a graduate of neuroscience at the College of William and Mary; Chad Merica, a graduate of psychology at University of Virginia; Frank Higginbotham, a graduate of Exercise Science at the University of North Carolina-Wilmington; and Rob Powell, a graduate of Communication at Berry College, alternated in giving their scientifically research and detailed presentation. The program began by defining both rape and sexual assault. Then a short video describing a male-on-male rape situation was shown to build victim-empathy. Parallels were drawn between the video and experiences a survivor may encounter, fol-

Gulls Just Wanna Have Fun! Homecoming 2008 begins this week!

Flyer Staff Report

Whether they travel across the bridge, down Rt. 13 or walk a few streets over, Salisbury alumni will soon head to the intramural fields, as they do every mid-October, for Homecoming. The Homecoming football game draws current students, alum and community members out to Sea Gull Stadium to cheer, mingle and perhaps have a few cold ones in the beer garden before the block party. The bustling excitement emanating from Salisbury University campus will be palpable this upcoming weekend, Oct. 16 - 19.

"We expect over 4,000 alumni and friends to return," said Jason Curtin, Director of Alumni Relations on Annual Giving. Curtin, an alumnus, will be celebrating his 10-year reunion as a graduate of SSU class of 1998. Classes whose graduating years ended in a three or an eight will be celebrating special reunions this year.

"We've so many fun events planned," said Pat Gotham, SGA's VP of External Affairs. The SGA is holding events all week long, including a game show, wing-eating contest, pep rally, and the block party on Saturday.

"This Homecoming is going to be amazing," Gotham said.

Homecoming is unique in its ability to connect current students and former students, who can all share one thing in common - their school pride. Student organizations and other affinity groups are encouraged to hold their own reunions to network and gain support for their respective organizations. "It's a great way to connect. This year we are having a New Student Experience Outdoor reunion for alumni and students of the Alquonkin, Acadia, Nantahala, Alaska and West Virginia trips to get together. Some fraternities are having a discussion on ways to help survivor as well as ways to end rape. "The statistics and video were eye-openers. It puts guys in a position where they realize how it must feel," said Tim Hackney, right tackle of SU's football team.

"It puts guys a step ahead if they ever encounter this situation," added Jeff Berman, left tackle.

What can men do?

Communicating during supposed sexual encounters, helping change social norms (like kidding about rape or attitudes hurtful to women) and showing empathy if and when you encounter a rape victim, are good ways to join the cause.

"An internalization of rape is wrong," Powell said.

"We fear victims having to live with rape alone for the rest of their lives," added Shortwell.

"Ordinary guys can change this. You just have to make a commitment to do so," ended Merica.

Unicyclist rolls through Century

During last week's Sea Gull Century, Claude Magnuson of Germantown, MD completed the 100-mile trek on a unicycle. His actual time spent on the unicycle (accounting for rest stops) was seven and a half hours. "The man was mobbed like a rockstar at the finish line," said Event Services Coordinator Chris Demone. "I think I saw him signing autographs."

5:25-7:03 p.m.

Tampering with Motor Vehicle

A student reported that she inadvertently took another student's parking space in the Caruthers parking lot. When she returned to her vehicle after class, she discovered that yogurt had been thrown on the windshield and an offensive note was left behind.

10/02/08

2:04 a.m.

Alcohol-Related Injury

A student reported that his friend, who was intoxicated, had fallen down a stairwell in Wicomico Hall. A University Police officer transported the student to the hospital for treatment.

10/02/08

8 a.m.-12:25 p.m.

Hit and Run Collision

A student reported that his vehicle was parked in Lot C on 10/2/08 between 8:00 AM & 12:25 PM. During that time, another vehicle collided with the complainant's vehicle, causing damage. The operator of the second vehicle failed to report the collision or leave any contact information on the complainant's vehicle.

10/01/08

2:45 p.m.

Suspicious Persons

A resident of Choptank Hall reported that two suspicious men came to her residence hall room claiming to be selling magazines. The men's behavior made the student feel uncomfortable. Through investigating this report, the University Police discovered that a group of men had recently been soliciting magazine subscriptions in several residence halls. The University Police and the Office of Housing and Residence Life are working together to address this matter.

Theft

A student reported that his iPod was stolen from the GUC fire-side lounge. The student had left the iPod unattended.

Although Sota did not attend college for his talent, he has received a lot of training.

"It's not always something that is passed down from person to person; most people go to school for it," he said.

Sota had a lot of gymnastics experience along with his physical theater training. He has studied circus arts at the San Francisco Circus Center, Trapez Art and Acro Sports.

Theater students attended the lecture after learning various skills throughout the week from Sota himself. Jen Manning, a freshman, was one of the students present. "It was really fun to work with him," she said. "As a class we learned how to spin plates and how to do Chinese yoga. We are going to be using what we learned in an upcoming performance," she said.

Out of the Suggestion Box

This column is based on the comments and concerns of students, faculty, and staff via the suggestion boxes online at www.salisbury.edu/suggestionbox. The President's Office seeks responses to the issues raised from appropriate campus personnel. Not everything can be fixed, but a reasoned explanation can be offered. Keep those suggestions coming!

From the Suggestion Box

"It is very inconvenient to have so many classes meeting in computer labs. Imagine walking across campus to print something only to find that you have to go elsewhere because there is a class using the lab. I thought this huge new building, TETC, would solve the problem. I pay my fees; I should expect some reasonably convenient access to University computer labs."

Jerome Waldron, Chief Information Officer, University Technology Services, responded:

"We have 14 computer labs on campus now and almost all are used for classes at one time or another. It can be hard to find an opening to print, unless you are in Fulton Hall, UC, or TETC. In Fulton Hall room 142 is an open lab. There is one open lab on the first floor of the TETC and there is also an open lab next to the Career Center in the UC. We are starting to add print kiosks for those times when labs are closed. We have one in Fulton Hall now and will soon be adding them in Henson and Devilbiss Halls. You can also print in Blackwell Library."

Oktobefest

While the beer garden was easily the most popular aspect of Oktobefest, there were plenty of opportunities for those not quite old enough to fully enjoy the seasonal celebration of "bier." The German Club hosted a cake eating contest, German style cuisine, music and an interesting display of medieval knights who were possibly battling over who would finish the last pint.

SU clubs also lined the path in front of Henson as a way to raise money and promote their organizations. Countless other mini-vendors were placed around the Oktobefest activities including a "free mugs" stand where members of the glass blowing class gave out goblets of glass free of charge.

There was even a student dressed in traditional Deutschland attire known as a "lederhosen." Sean Stone, President of the German Club, was not ashamed to be wearing his seasonal garb as he said, "Hey it's Oktoberfest. We're just here to have fun and introduce German culture."

In addition to the quad showed several freshmen bunting almost subconsciously to the German beat that echoed throughout the area.

Early voting may push through in MD

By Kelley Matney
Staff Writer

In three weeks, registered voters all over Maryland will gather at the polls to place their vote for the next president of the United States. But, what if polling places weren't open for only one day; what if you could vote up to 10 days before Election Day? Well, also on the ballot next month will be a statewide referendum that could do just that.

The constitutional amendment would make it so that three designated polling places would be open 10 days early in each county, allowing voters to vote in or outside their registered district before the actual Election Day.

The argument over this referendum has become a highly partisan issue, with Democrats supporting it, saying it would decrease long lines on Election Day and increase overall voter turnout; and Republicans against it, citing fraud and high cost.

"As for concerns about voter fraud, I think early voting could actually alleviate those fears. All the boards of election in Maryland are connected by a computerized data base. This makes it easy to change a voter's registration from one county to another...the election officials drop the old registration and add the new one right away. This same process should also prevent any attempts at double voting." The Board of Elections also has in place a good system of checks to prevent various forms of fraud," said Dr. Creston Long, history professor and Co-Director of the Institute for Public Affairs and Civic Engagement (PACE).

Maryland wouldn't be the first state to institute early voting. Almost 30 states allow in-person, no excuse, early voting, including

California, Florida, Arizona and Illinois.

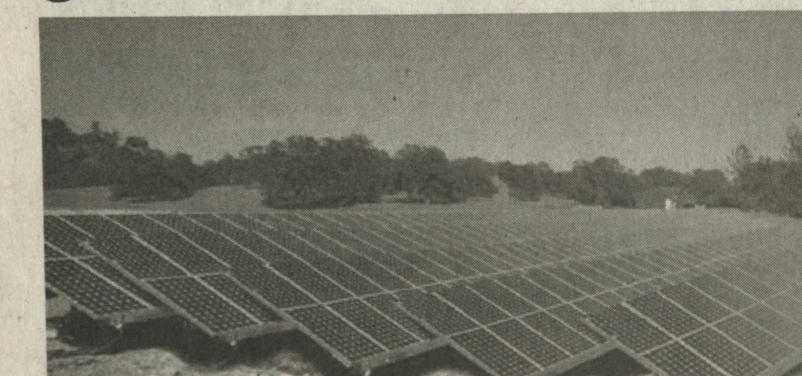

"Personally, I'd hate to see the voting process be spread out too much because I think it would take away from the sense of purpose on Election Day. At the same time, for many voters it would probably be very convenient to cast a ballot early," Long said.

Some voters that might find it most convenient to vote early are college students. For many students, including those at Salisbury University, it is difficult to find a way to vote with classes and jobs taking up a majority of their time. Also with most students not living in their registered district, having an extra 10 days might make it easier to find a way to get to the polls.

"There is something about the process of going to vote in a public place that actually attracts many voters to the polls," Long said.

The constitutional amendment would make it so that three designated polling places would be open 10 days early in each county, allowing voters to vote in or outside their registered district before the actual Election Day.

Chill Out campaign seeks SU students to partake in global warming initiative

Butte College, a two-year institution located in a Northern CA nature reserve, won this year's challenge. Shown above is the solar array that provides about a third of the energy used by the college.

The National Wildlife Federation's "Chill Out: Campus Solutions to Global Warming" is asking Salisbury University, along with other college campuses, to help find solutions to the growing problem of global warming. Campuses across the country are taking steps to solve the issue, and "Chill Out" hopes SU students will join the cause.

Global Warming is the single largest threat to wildlife today. Scientists say to avoid the worst impacts pollution must be reduced by 80 percent before the year 2050. If a two percent decrease occurs every year for the next 40 years, the 80 percent reduction is very possible. Through energy efficiency, renewable energy, habitat restoration, and awareness projects, campuses can begin leading the way to a healthier environment.

The winners of the first "Chill Out" challenge were broadcasted online on April 16, 2008. The broadcast featured positive, practical solutions to global warming and how they are implemented by college students, faculty, and staff.

One in four mammals face extinction, according to survey

By Laura Dignan
Staff Writer

It was announced last week that one in four of the world's mammals face extinction according to a survey conducted by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN). The five year study, conducted by 1,700 researchers in over 130 countries, surveyed the 5,487 known mammals. It is the most comprehensive assessment so far.

The results were revealed in Barcelona at the World Conservation Congress, a meeting of 8,000 scientists, conservationists, business leaders and representatives of mammals that have been declared critically endangered, the highest ranking before extinction. One of these mammals is the Iberian Lynx, one of the rarest animals in the world.

The Tasmanian devil, only found in Australia, is one of 450 species considered as endangered. It is suffering an infectious facial cancer epidemic and its population has fallen 64 percent in 11 years.

"About one-half of the world's remaining apes, monkeys and other primates face threats from hunting or destruction of forests to make way for farming," said Russell A. Mittermeier, president of Conservation International.

"Chimp and gorilla meat fetches a higher price in many markets in Central African cities than beef or chicken because it's considered a luxury item. We are losing many of these animals that otherwise could survive because they cling to relatively good habitat."

Five percent of mammals were found to be stable or have an expanding population despite the bad statistics.

One of these species includes the black-footed ferret which was almost on the verge of extinction until conservationists stepped in. Another stable species is the African elephant which has been downgraded from "vulnerable to extinction" to "near-threatened".

Including all 44,838 animal and plant species assessed worldwide, 16,928 are under threat, up 622 species than last year. One in eight birds, one in three amphibians and 70 percent of plants are threatened.

The new law could be beneficial to consumers' health in that they can now be consciously aware of the number of calories contained within their food. But will the law negatively affect the fast food industry?

California law requires calorie counts on menus

By Eric J. Buratty
Staff Writer

California recently became the first state requiring calorie-counts on fast-food menus. Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger signed the bill to attempt to promote good health. Certainly it is a way of telling the public that they should watch what they eat. Obesity is of great concern – not only in California, but all across America. Helping to inform Californians is a great way to steer society toward making correct food choices. Most nutritional information and calorie-counts for restaurants can be found either the internet or in books, but California realizes that people often do not have the time to do their own research.

This law has the potential to create both positive and negative effects. Hopefully, the positive will outweigh the negative. Some positive benefits are that people will become more aware of the foods they eat and realize how their choices may lead to excessive weight gain.

Restaurants have until 2011 to follow this protocol, another benefit because it encourages restaurants to create healthier options in the interim.

This would show an improvement for both the businesses and the consumers as they move toward healthier lifestyles.

At the least, if people recognize the quantity of calories they consume, they will be encouraged to exercise to offset some of that caloric intake.

However, people might be pessimistic about the idea, and not take the law seriously. They may ignore the information and proceed to order the same unhealthy foods they always have. Another negative possibility is that fast-food restaurants will lose money and go out of business, impacting state revenue. Finally, some customers might think this will ruin their experience of "enjoying" themselves.

Overall it comes down to a simple formula: if you consume more calories than you burn, you gain weight; if you burn more calories than you consume, you lose weight. Promoting more health awareness in California is a great start to a healthier America. "It won't totally stop people from eating fast-food items like they always have, but it will give them a basis of comparison for hopefully selecting more informed, healthier choices," said Kate Cerulli, University Dietician. This is especially true since people are eating out more than in the past, she added.

Living a happy lifestyle certainly starts with living healthfully. This law has the potential to create positive benefits for the people of California. Hopefully, similar laws may be put into effect across the rest of the country.

SU TV seeks members for revival

Behind the scenes at SU TV. In the foreground is the 24-channel Mackie audio mixer. In the background on the counter is the video switcher. There's also a DVE, CG machine, and on the far wall, monitors and camera controllers.

SU TV is making a comeback! Student Eric Ware is in charge of the club, and he hopes to attract all kinds of students both on and off screen. There are many different types of ideas for the show such as: a game show, a dating show, debating about the upcoming Presidential Election, and PSA's for campus clubs.

I think this is a great idea, and I think that every student should try and get involved and get their voice heard and talent recognized.

Whether you are skilled at screen-writing, a connoisseur with cameras and recording equipment, or born to be a star, you should join the club – I am sure there is something for every one. I am in this club, and being a Communications major, am enjoying being a part of the SU TV revival. Even if you are like myself and definitely do not want to go in front of the camera, you can still help out by shooting the show, editing and uploading the show, helping to come up with ideas for the show, screenwriting, and so much more. SU TV also needs more ideas for upcoming shows and ideas to keep not why each candidate is the best; it is about why the other candidate will fail.

I do want to say that I respect both as people. Let me explain why I am hesitant on either candidate. Obama is a first term senator, and despite the fact that he is the most eloquent speaker I have heard in a long time, he lacks experience. That can be made up through the cabinet, but it does not make me want him as the leader of my country. McCain has many years on Obama, but that does not give him all of the wisdom needed to lead the nation either. Yes, he is a maverick and I do not believe he will be Bush all over again, but I do not trust him.

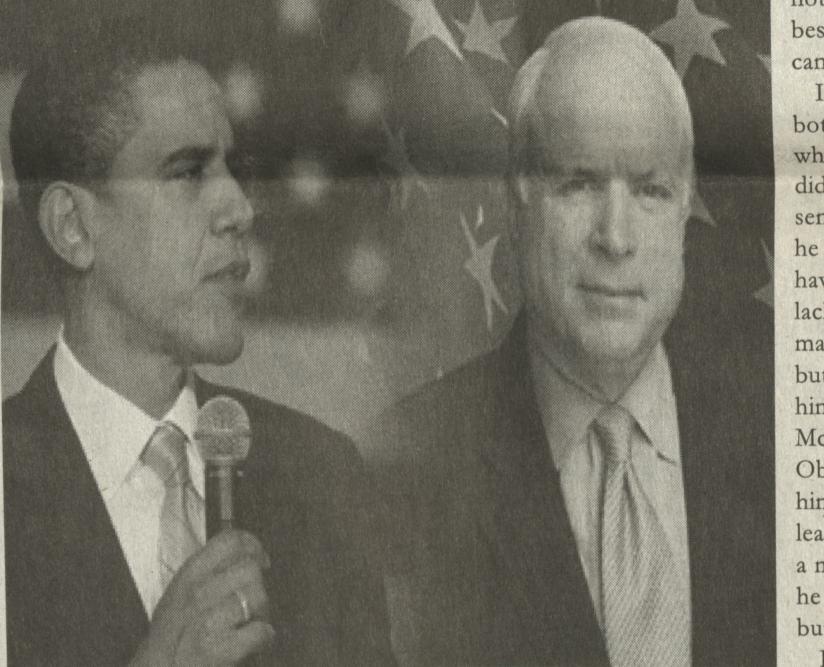

Both candidates promise a lot of things, but I do not envision either going through with the promises. I tend to disagree with a lot of liberal policies, but that does not mean I will not vote for one. I do not always agree with all conservative policies either. But to me, neither candidate is showing me that he can get the job done.

This year, this time, this election is what matters the most.

The next president cannot screw up. I feel that McCain and Obama would make too many mistakes unless they can prove to me in the next month that they will fix it. So Mr. Obama and Mr. McCain, what do you stand for and what are you going to do for me?

Students, I encourage you to become part of the revival. This is going to be a TV station completely run by students for the students of Salisbury University. This club's purpose is to entertain our students, and what better way to entertain you than to have you on board, contributing ideas? I say we form a great, involved club and entertain ourselves with comedies, game shows and music from local groups. This is such a great club, and I really want to see it succeed. Let's band together, form an awesome club, and revive SU TV!

Indecision 2008: A student's plea

This student feels that the candidates are repetitive and she craves something new to guide her toward her decision.

By Stacie Manger
Staff Writer

I watched the second presidential debate because I still have not decided whom I am going to vote for. Once again, I was disappointed and I still have not made a choice.

My immediate thought after listening to McCain and Obama bash each other for 90 minutes was, "Dear McDonald's, thank you for saying nothing." I heard one new policy from McCain about using $300 of the $700 billion from the bailout on home values and mortgages. Wow, one new idea.

I have been following the election since the primaries and I have political fatigue. I am so tired of listening to the same things over and over again.

Neither candidate is saying anything new. Neither candidate is telling me what I want to hear.

When has a candidate talked about the issues? They have not and that is what matters to me.

Tell me what you are actually going to do to fix America. They are too busy bashing each other and one-upping each other. It is not what matters to me.

Neither candidate is showing me that he can get the job done.

This year, this time, this election is what matters the most.

The next president cannot screw up. I feel that McCain and Obama would make too many mistakes unless they can prove to me in the next month that they will fix it. So Mr. Obama and Mr. McCain, what do you stand for and what are you going to do for me?

Dear Editor,
What's up with LAST YEAR'S photos of Oktoberfest? That is so lame. If you couldn't publish current photos, then don't put anything at all. You guys waste so much space. The Flyer could have twice as many stories in it if you would just use smaller photos and tighter writing.

Illustrator Kadir Nelson shares story with SU, displays "Juxtaposition" exhibit in Fulton

A community member admires Nelson's "Junkyard Moses," which, according to his Web site, depicts an ancient football game played as game equipment.

By Stacie Manger

Artist and children's literature illustrator Kadir Nelson spoke Friday evening, October 10, in the new Teacher Education and Technology Center.

"I didn't think of my drawing materials as toys, which was a sign to my mother that I was serious about my work," Nelson said during the lecture. "My mother encouraged me and supplied me with materials. She also saved my drawings."

Nelson began drawing at an early age and received formal training from his uncle. He said that his early drawings were of his favorite characters, especially Mickey Mouse. Nelson was more of a visual learner instead of a reader. He said he checked out art books and how to draw books. He would trace them until he could draw the figure or likeness on his own.

"The images he chose to [show] helped the audience see how Nelson grew as an artist and how he developed his style."

worked on the movies

"Amistad" and "Spirit: Stallion of the Cimarron."

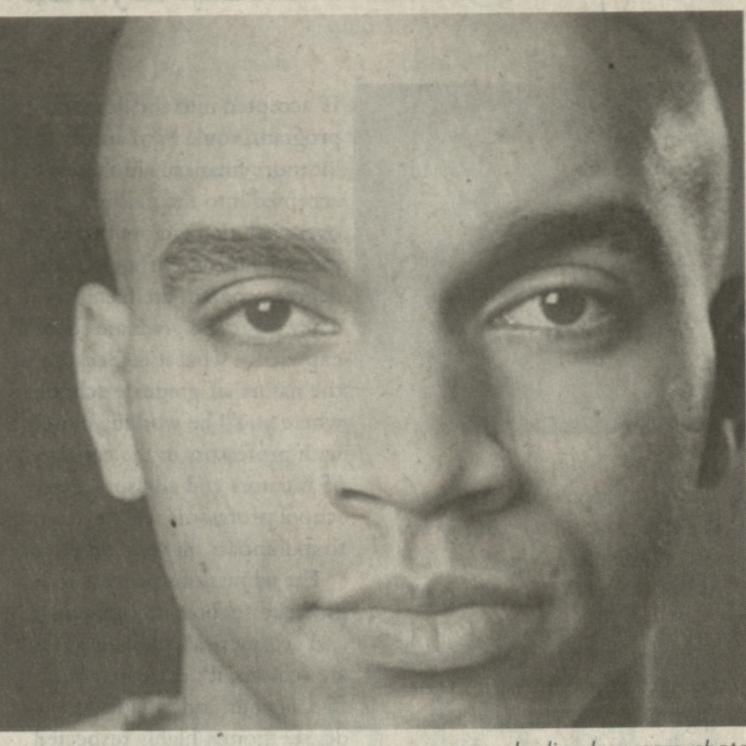

After drawing horses for a year and a half with "Spirit," he moved to children's literature. In all, he has illustrated around 21 books.

"I believe artwork should be able to stand on its own," he said. "I look at it like a silent film."

Foley agreed with the artist and said the image itself should be able to tell the story just as much as the words on the page. His images truly portrayed that belief, she said.

area and how a person dresses.

There has to be a reference, he said.

It does not work if one makes the stuff up. Junior Angie Hammond said she was impressed by Nelson's efforts to make his work as historically accurate as possible.

Overall, Nelson delivered an inspiring and highly informative speech.

"Everyone has the ability to create something beautiful," he said.

"It could be artwork or music or even cleaning the dishes. Every mother thinks clean dishes are beautiful."

Ackermann up for NCAA Woman of the Year

By Ben Muell
Staff Writer

Salisbury's Sue Ackermann has been named as one of nine finalists for the NCAA Woman of the Year award. This is the first time a SU student-athlete has received such esteem, as the 18th annual award will honor one exceptional female student-athlete for her hard work and leadership in the classroom, on the field and in the community. The nine finalists who were chosen span all three collegiate divisions and include a variety of sports.

"It was a huge honor that I really didn't expect because there were so many deserving athletes. All the credit goes to the team and the coaches," Ackerman said. "There are some seniors on the team this year that are just as qualified."

Head coach Jim Nestor said she was very deserving of the honor "with all she accomplished here and her hard work and focus on the field and in the classroom." He continued to say that she was a "leader and knew when to speak up. She demanded a lot out of herself and her teammates."

Some of Ackermann's academic awards and honors include finishing third overall for College Division Academic All-America of the Year, College Division At-Large Academic All-American of the Year, Academic All-District first team, IWLCA Division III Scholar-Athlete of the Year, CAC Women's Scholar-Athlete of the Year and SU Female Scholar-Athlete of the Year.

Ackermann's on-field exploits have been well noted as she graduated SU as the all-time leader in points (321), assists (149), second in goals (172) and is the holder of the second highest single-season point total (152) in NCAA women's lacrosse history. Ackermann also garnered multiple awards for her skills on the field. A few of her nominations include IWLCA All-American first team, Capital Athletic Conference Player of the Year, All-CAC first team, Inside Lacrosse Division III Athlete of the Year and NCAA All-Tournament team.

The list of awards and honors for Ackermann is very long, but most notably last year she graduated with a degree in Exercise Science and a 3.94 GPA. She is currently still at SU working on her MBA and is now the assistant coach for the lacrosse team. Only one Division Three athlete has ever won the NCAA Woman of the Year award, and Salisbury could not be more proud to have Ackermann in contention.

The No. 24 SU volleyball team (27-1, CAC 5-0) won the Green Terror Invitational at McDaniel over the weekend by defeating Penn St.-Behrend, Gordon, McDaniel and Gallaudet.

On day one, SU defeated Penn St.-Behrend in three sets. Senior Stacey Krebs finished with 17 kills. SU then went on to defeat Gordon College in three sets. Krebs continued to play well and recorded 14 kills.

On day two, SU defeated McDaniel and Gallaudet to win the tournament championship. The Gulls defeated both regional opponents in three sets. Krebs would go on to make the All-Tournament Team. SU takes on York on Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Maggs. SU won their fifth tournament of the season in six attempts.

Women's Soccer

The SU women's soccer team (4-4-4, CAC 2-0-2) came up short against Richard Stockton 3-1 on Wednesday. The game stayed scoreless through the first half, but the Ospreys went on to score three second half goals. Leah Pocorba scored first for the Ospreys at the 51:41 mark. Sea Gulls defenseman Kelli Salter tied the game 16 minutes later at 1-1. The Ospreys regained the lead six minutes later when Shelley Gibney scored. Amanda Altman scored the final goal for Stockton in the 80th minute.

SU returns to action on Tuesday at 4 p.m. when they host conference for Marymount at the SU soccer complex.

SU Men's Club Volleyball looks for a repeat year

Salisbury Men's Club Volleyball forges new rivalry with the Naval Academy.

By Rachel Grau
Staff Writer

The SU men's club volleyball team returns after a successful 2007-2008 season and is looking for a repeat year. The Gulls ended last year's season coming home with the 2008 Eastern Intercollegiate Volleyball Association championship trophy, and expect nothing more, but a repeat trophy.

"I have high expectations for this team, we have a powerful offense with incredible defenders," said senior Bryan Shannon. "We expect to repeat in the conference championship for the first time ever, and be successful at nationals."

The Gulls are starting their preseason with an offense led by seniors Shannon, Ryan Chandler and Jeff Southworth. Sophomore Danny Cole will also look to contribute power to an already solid offense. The team will also look to senior setters John Zahner and Chandler, along with top server, senior Marty Martinez to help them repeat as champions.

Leading the blocking for this years team, are junior Dan Dehmer and sophomore John Kemberling. Seniors Jon Moynihan, Jason Sprankle, Topper Person and junior Jason Schaevel will contribute to the defense.

The team has high hopes for the new coming team members. Freshmen Kevin Southworth and Jeremy Marshall bring youth to the team. Seniors Andrew Eck, Josh Weber, Drew Fagundus and Adam Evans return as veterans.

"We will be the team to beat in the conference and everyone will be gunning for us," said advisor Dennis Leoutsakas. The Gulls are self-coached and led by senior captains Shannon and Chandler, along with advisor Leoutsakas. The team has three tournaments planned for the fall season, including an upcoming round robin memorial tournament at James Madison University.

The Gulls are in the Division Two central conference of the Eastern Intercollegiate Volleyball Association. Other schools in the conference are Loyola, Towson, UMBC, Johns Hopkins, George Washington and Georgetown. "The competition in our conference is good, but it's not good enough," Sprankle said.

Towson has always been a big rival and Loyola and UMBC are also really good this year," Shannon said. The team will also be playing many big division one teams including University of Maryland, Duke, University of North Carolina, Penn State and The Naval Academy.

The team is selling Salisbury Volleyball t-shirts at homecoming in order to fundraise for the upcoming tournaments, including the National tournament being held in the spring in Kansas City.
